“First, if it is not apparent to you yet, it will be soon: there is no magic bullet for this economic crisis, no magic bailout package, no magic stimulus... We are going to have to learn to live with a lot more uncertainty for a lot longer than our generation has ever experienced.”

Community Input
Challenges (2004)

- Local workforce was shrinking, with below average educational attainment and a deficit of “soft skills.” Fear of a “brain drain.”

- Local economic structure was not sustainable – furniture/textile manufacturing was declining, with constant overseas cost pressures.

- Small business people and entrepreneurs did not receive enough attention and were unaware of supportive resources.

- Many community input respondents said a lack of vision for the future and fractured local leadership were core challenges.

- Economic trends and local events had led to a sense of defeatism and discouragement about the area’s prospects.
Opportunities (2004)

- Low cost of living and doing business; sufficient quantity of sites and buildings; ample supplies of water and other utilities; competitive local airport.

- Geographic centrality to major urban areas, major airports, the mountains, and ocean.

- Quality small-town atmosphere and a great place to raise a family.

- Target cluster areas identified included:
  - Health Care
  - Plastics Product Manufacturing
  - Tourism
  - Wholesale Trade/Transportation and Warehousing
  - Food Processing

Revitalization Strategy
The over-arching goal is a 21st century blueprint for sustainable job creation encompassing best practices of advanced manufacturing and small/minority/entrepreneurial development and growth, all built in partnership with higher education.

The best opportunity to be successful is to build upon past achievements rather than to create something entirely new.

An opportunity to do something transformative for the community.

Moving Forward
“Everything we have learned in Outliers says that success follows a predictable course. It is not the brightest who succeed, nor is success simply the sum of decisions and efforts we made on our own behalf. It is rather, a gift. Outliers are those who have been given opportunities and who have had the strength and presence of mind to seize them.”

-Malcolm Gladwell
